THE STORY OF THE RIBBON GANG

The Ribbon gang was founded by Ralph Entwistle, a young English convict. Ralph had been sentenced to life transportation to New South Wales for stealing clothing. He was sent across the newly traversed Blue Mountains to work on the land of John Lipscombe, near Bathurst.

In November 1829, Ralph and another prisoner were given the task of driving a bullock dray to the Sydney markets. The cargo was a load of merino wool, which would bring a handsome return for their master. After selling the wool, they had returned with the proceeds and supplies down Parramatta Rd to Lapstone Hill, over the Blue Mountains along Cox's road, down the precipitous Mt York pass, and along the old Bathurst road through Hartley, O'Connell and Tarana. On returning to Bathurst, they paused for a dip in the cool waters of the Macquarie River. In fact a skinny dip! Unfortunately for the two swimmers, the Governor was in the area to inspect the new settlement of Bathurst. Just as the two were cooling off, the governor's party were about to cross the river. Realising their imminent danger, the two convicts hid on the bank behind some reeds and tried to dress. However they hadn't realised that there were two groups of soldiers and were promptly arrested by the second group, led by the Bathurst magistrate!

Later Ralph Entwistle became embittered and this incident together with similar ones led to the first major rebellion of convicts west of the Blue Mountains. Less than a year later, Entwistle persuaded a number of other convicts to take up arms and take to the bush.

On September 23rd 1830, nine men escaped from their master and roamed the countryside in the Fitzgerald Valley, south of Bathurst.

The men visited properties and stole food, guns, horses and ammunition. The gang persuaded other convicts to join in until the gang grew to around 50. One Sydney newspaper was reporting a full scale rebellion of 500 escapees roaming around Bathurst! A local press report written by George Suttor of Bathurst mentioned the leader of the gang wearing "a profusion of white streamers in his hat". Some called them the ribbon boys.

Many of the gang were of Irish extraction and may have copied an Irish secret society known as the 'Ribbon men' using this as a sign of their rebellion.

The Ribbon gang headed towards the Abercrombie river and at Trunkey Creek, a hard core group split from the masses and headed for the nearby Abercrombie caves. After resting in the caves for a while, the police and troopers finally caught up with them. A pitched battle took place on top of Grove Creek Falls resulting in bloodshed on both sides and the gang losing their horses. The rebels retreated on foot back to the caves, hiding in Bushranger's cave. The fugitives attempted to head for the hills. About 3km from the caves, they encountered a group of soldiers. A gun battle ensued and the gang were surrounded and arrested.

Ralph Entwistle and his men were charged with murder, bushranging and horse thieving in Bathurst. On November 1830, ten members of the Ribbon boys were hanged. This was the first and largest public hanging in Bathurst. The site of the hanging is marked today by the council street sign 'Ribbon Gang Lane'.
